

Establishment of the British Empire in India

Aurangzeb was the last of the powerful Mughal rulers. He established control over a very large part of the territory that is now known as India. After his death in 1707 CE, many Mughal governors (subedars) and big zamindars began asserting their authority and establishing regional kingdoms.

Consequently, Delhi could no longer function as an effective centre. By the second half of the eighteenth century, however, a new power was emerging on the political horizon – the British. Did you know that the British originally came to India as a small trading company? How then did they become the masters of a vast empire?

East India Company Comes to East

In 1600 CE, the East India Company acquired a charter from the ruler of England, Queen Elizabeth I, granting it the sole right to trade with the East. This meant that no other trading group in England could compete with the East India Company. With this charter, the Company could venture across the oceans, looking for new lands from which it could buy goods at a cheap price, and carry them back to Europe to sell at higher prices.

Mercantilism

Mercantile is a business enterprise that makes profit primarily through trade. Trading companies in those days made profit primarily by excluding competition, so that they could buy cheap and sell at higher rates.

The royal charter, however, could not prevent other European powers from entering the Eastern markets. By the time the first English ships sailed down the west coast of Africa, round the Cape of Good Hope, and crossed the Indian Ocean, the Portuguese had already established their presence in the western coast of India, and had their base in Goa. It was Vasco da Gama, a Portuguese explorer, who had discovered this sea route to India in 1498. By the early seventeenth century, the Dutch (Holland) too were exploring the possibilities of trade in the Indian Ocean. Soon the French traders arrived on the scene.

The problem was that all the companies were interested in buying the same goods. The fine qualities of cotton and silk produced in India had a big market in Europe. Spices like pepper, cloves, cardamom and cinnamon too were in great demand. Competition among the European companies inevitably pushed up the prices at which the goods were purchased. Trade was carried out with arms and trading posts were protected through fortification. This effort to fortify settlements and carry on profitable trade led to intense conflict with the local rulers.

Armed Traders

European traders formed their own companies to trade in India. The English traders formed the English East India Company while traders from France formed the French East India Company. Both companies fought against each other for many years to capture the trade in India. Each made efforts to drive the other away. They brought armies from England and France to help them in their fight. The kings of England and France also backed their respective companies and helped them in many ways. The companies acquired land in India and built their own forts to wage battles against each other.

Fig 15.3 A drawing of Machilipatnam from 1676

The wealth that was accumulated in this way was one of the most important factors that enabled England to develop industries and establish their dominance in the world.

This was the time when England as well as some other European countries like Spain, Portugal, France, Holland and Germany were acquiring colonies in North and South America, Africa, and Asia. The colonies contributed to the power and wealth of these European countries.

The Mughal emperors as well as many rajas and nawabs began to realise how dangerous it was to let such traders maintain armies, build forts, fight battles and use military force to establish their economic power in their kingdoms.

As long as the Mughal empire was strong, it had not been possible for the European companies to establish their own military power in India. In fact, Emperors Shahjahan and Aurangzeb had fought and defeated the European companies on a number of occasions. However, some years after the death of Aurangzeb, the different provinces of the empire became almost independent and were ruled by their respective governors. Thus Bengal, Awadh (Lucknow) and Hyderabad became independent kingdoms which only nominally acknowledged the Mughal Emperor as their supreme.

Once the Mughal empire broke up into these small kingdoms, the companies found their chance to assert their power. Though the rajas and nawabs wanted more trade, they also tried to check the growing military strength of the companies.

For example, in 1764 CE, Nawab Anwaruddin Khan of Arcot (in northern Tamil Nadu) sent his army to fight against the French company. However, to everyone's astonishment, the small French army managed to defeat the large army of the Nawab. The European traders became bolder after this victory and felt that they could do whatever they wanted in India because of the strength of their armies.

How were the European armies different from the armies of Indian rulers in the 1700's? The soldiers of European armies were better trained and received higher and more regular salaries. They also had better cannons and guns. The European armies held parades and drills every day. With such regular exercise, Indian soldiers enrolled in these armies also became quite skilled in battle.

Growing European Interference in the Kingdoms of India

The companies used their military advantage to increase their profits from trade. On many occasions, when they saw two Indian rulers fighting among themselves, they would take sides and get involved in the fight. They would lend their army to one side to help them defeat their rivals. But, in return, the companies would demand and extract many trade concessions from the rulers. The rulers also 'gifted' the companies large amounts of money in return for their military help. This money helped the companies increase their trade even more.

For example, Dupleix, a governor of the French East India Company, helped Muzaffar Jang to become the Nizam of Deccan. In return, Muzaffar Jang gave the French some territories near Pondicherry and the town of Machilipatnam. He also gave Rs. 50,000 to the Company, Rs. 50,000 to the French troops, and Rs. 20,00,000 and a Jagir worth Rs. 1,00,000 per year to Dupleix.

Fig 15.5 Local boats bring goods from ships in Madras, painted by William Simpson, 1867

The companies also began to acquire small parts of kingdoms as 'gifts' from the local rulers. They would collect land tax from the villages and towns in these areas and use the money for their trading activities. They also used this money for maintaining and improving their army.

Slowly, the English Company began emerging victorious over the French Company in the struggle for dominance in India.

Misuse of the Company's Power

The Indian rulers soon found that the burden of giving 'gifts' to the English East India Company and bearing the expenses of its army was becoming very heavy. They were also troubled by many other activities of the company.

Some Indian rulers exempted the company from paying taxes on many of the goods it purchased from their kingdoms. However, people began taking advantage of these concessions. For example, employees of the company would do their own private trading. But they would show their own goods as belonging to the company to escape paying taxes.

In this way, while the company got richer, its employees and officers also made a lot of money in India and returned home wealthy. Many Indian traders and seths helped the company in its trade. They too showed their goods as belonging to the Company to escape paying taxes.

Thus, there was much looting and swindling taking place in the kingdoms under the Company. So proud was the Company of its military strength that it began working with great impudence. It forced craftsmen to sell their goods at low prices. In the areas it had acquired, the company tried to squeeze revenue from the peasants beyond reasonable limits. When the rulers protested against such practices, the English fought against them. They even went to the extent of dethroning the kings and anointing successors who would be only too willing to remove any obstacles in the way of their trade.

The English Impose their Rule

The English gradually began to feel that they could make fuller and freer use of India for trade if they themselves ruled the country. So they started removing the nawabs and rajas and started ruling themselves.

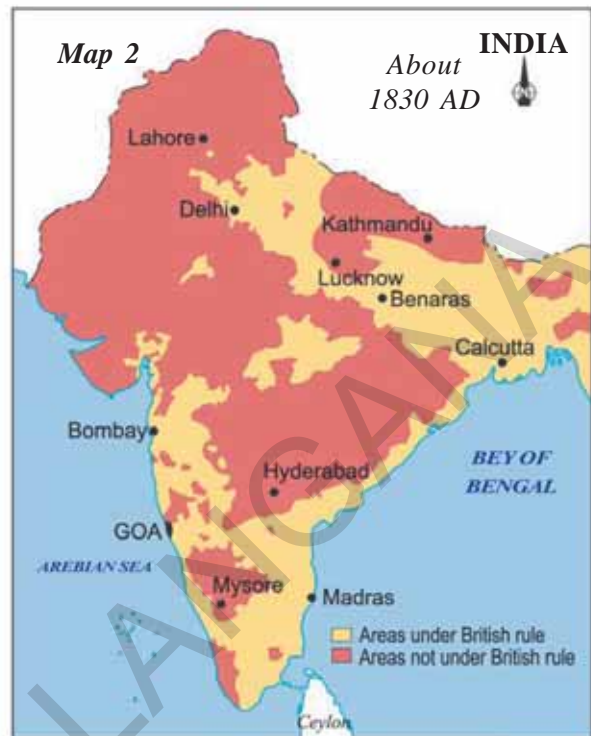

In 1757 CE, the English defeated Sirajuddaula, the Nawab of Bengal, at a place called Plassey and established their rule over Bengal. The Battle of Plassey is an important event in the Indian history. After that, the English started conquering many other kingdoms of India, big and small.

The English East India Company also forced the Nizam of Hyderabad to hand over the coastal Andhra Pradesh districts (Krishna, East Godavari, West Godavari, Srikakulam, Vijayanagaram, Prakasam Visakhapatnam and Guntur) between the years 1765-1768. These were known as the 'Northern Sarkars' of the Madras province of the company. In return, the English agreed to maintain an army contingent for the use of the Nizam. In fact, this army was used more to control the Nizam rather than to help him.

Many rajas and nawabs understood the British plot and fought hard against them. They included Haider Ali and Tipu Sultan of Mysore, the Maratha Sardar Mahadaji Shinde, Nana Phadnawis and others. But their kingdoms were small. One by one, they lost them to the English.

Among those who played an important role in the British success on the battlefield were Generals Robert Clive, Warren Hastings and Lord Wellesley. Slowly, large parts of India came under the direct rule of the English. In many places, the rajas and nawabs continued to rule, but they were under the sovereignty of the English. An English official (known as the 'resident') would be assigned to stay in the court of these kings or nawabs so that the British government could keep an eye on how they ran their kingdoms.

Discontent with English Rule

The English had to fight with many kings and nawabs to establish their rule. You will learn more about their policies and administration in later years. They constantly faced resistance from the people of India.

The royal families resisted them because the English would anoint or remove rulers as and when it suited their purposes.

Farmers and landowners resisted them because the English imposed very high taxes on them and collected the taxes very strictly. So they lived in constant fear of failing to pay the taxes and losing their lands as a result.

Tribal people also offered resistance, because of the new rules and laws that the English began implementing in their areas. As a result, many tribal people lost their rights over jungles and land. You will read more about this in the later years.

Many Hindus and Muslims feared that the English would destroy their faiths and convert them to Christianity.

The English faced their toughest battle in 1857 when, for a few months, their rule was uprooted over almost the entire northern Indian region. This revolt was started by Indian sipahis or soldiers, who were soon joined by royal families, landowners, farmers, tribal people and craftsmen. The royal families who joined the revolt include Nana Sahib, the adopted son of the peshwa, Tantia Tope, his general, the Begum of Awadh, and Rani Lakshmi Bai of Jhansi. Hindus and Muslims fought together against their common enemy.

The Revolt of 1857

Place: The military cantonment at Meerut, where the British army had camped

Date: Sunday, May 10, 1857

The sun was about to set when the Indian soldiers began firing their guns on their English officers. These were the same soldiers who had helped the English to conquer the kingdoms of India. They were now fed up with the behaviour of the English. They were not getting their salaries on time and they were not treated with respect in the British army. On top of this, the sipahis suspected that the cartridges for their new guns (rifles) were coated with cow and pig fat to keep them dry. They felt that their religious faith was being violated. Based on this suspicion, a similar uprising had occurred at Barrackpur, near Kolkata in March 1857. The sense of discontent at Meerut was widespread and on this day, the soldiers opened fire on their English officers. The rebellious soldiers marched towards Delhi that very night.

News of the sipahi revolt spread like wildfire in Meerut. A wave of people came from the bazaar and began attacking the bungalows of the English. Policemen joined the mobs and before long, the bungalows and offices of the English were set on fire. Many English people were killed.

Place: Delhi, the Lal Quila

Date: Monday, May 11, 1857

By daybreak, the sipahis of Meerut had crossed the Yamuna and reached Delhi. They entered the Lal Quila where Badshah Bahadur Shah Zafar of the Mughal dynasty was imprisoned by the English. They declared him their badshah and persuaded him to reject the sovereignty of the British. 'Drive out the English and bring back Mughal rule' was the clarion call of the rebels.

Fig 15.8 A view of Delhi in 1857 showing the pontoon bridge the soldiers used to cross the Yamuna.

The Revolt Spreads

No sooner did this call go out, revolts against the English erupted in many places. Sipahis went on a rampage in the cantonments at Aligarh, Mainpuri, Bulandshahar, Attock and Mathura. The English were badly shaken. Their situation was, indeed, very delicate.

Fig 15.9 Jhansi Lakshmi Bai - Fighting with the Britishers

There were a mere 45,000 English officers and soldiers in India. Against this, the number of Indian soldiers in their army was two lakh and thirty two thousand! It was these very sipahis who revolted. So, who would now protect the lives and property of the English residents in the towns? The Indian sections of their army could not be relied on. Consequently, many English soldiers were held back to protect the English families. As a result, the revolt could not be suppressed immediately and it spread from place to place.

Fig 15.10 Nana Saheb

Many royal families, whose kingdoms had been taken away by the English, joined the revolt. Among them were the former Nawab of Awadh and the Maratha peshwa Nana Sahib. Armies of rebel sipahis and rulers from different corners of the country marched towards Delhi. People were helping them for driving out the English so to establish their rule in their respective provinces.

Hyderabad was not silent as it suffered under the colonial policies. Among others Turrebaz Khan was a revolutionary who fought against the British in Hyderabad State during the revolt of 1857. He, with the support of Moulvi Allauddin, mobilized 6,000 people and attacked the British Residency, present day Women's College, Koti. He revolted at a time when the Nizam supported the British. However the movement was suppressed and Turrebaz Khan was executed.

Revolt in Every Village

The flames of revolt spread from kasba to kasba and village to village in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar. The peasants and zamindars took up arms together and had the English and their officers on the run. They stopped paying taxes to the British government. They tore up railway lines, burnt down police stations, courts, post & telegraph offices and uprooted the telegraph wires. All these were the new services that the English had introduced in India. As defeat stared the English in their faces, the Indian people became more and more courageous in their fight against the British rule.

The rebels looted the houses and burnt the documents of many moneylenders. These moneylenders had become very powerful in the villages with the help of English laws.

The Revolt is Suppressed

Despite the widespread success of the revolt, the English slowly gained control over the situation.

The rebels fought bravely. But, there were two major weaknesses among them.

Fig 15.11 Hanging the rebels.

In every town or region, different groups of rebels fought separately against the English. They did not fight together. There was no combined and well-planned effort. So the English were able to tackle the rebels one by one in each area.

The rebels also faced a shortage of modern arms. The guns and cannons, cartridges and gunpowder they required were brought from outside India. Consequently, the rebels had to fight with old guns, arrows, spears and swords. How long could such weapons last in a contest against the more modern arms?

Even then, the speed with which the revolt spread frightened the English. So they behaved with greater cruelty whenever they suppressed a rebel group. They killed the rebels in a most inhuman way and hanged their bodies from trees in the villages so that the village folk would 'understand' the consequences of revolt.

They tied some rebels to the mouths of cannons and blew them to bits. Many rebels went into hiding, moving from place to place to avoid being caught by the English. Many of them even went to places like Nepal to hide.

The English deported Emperor Bahadur Shah Zafar to a far away location in Rangoon and it was there that the last Mughal emperor died. The revolt of 1857 was the biggest revolt to challenge the might of the English. After suppressing it, their hold over India became stronger and they ruled the country for the next 90 years.

After the Revolt

It took the English more than a year to suppress the revolt of 1857. During this period, they changed many of their policies and adopted new ones. In 1858, Queen Victoria of England made an important declaration. She said Indian kings should rule their own kingdoms without anxiety because the English would not try to dethrone them.

In this way, they established a close collaboration with the royal families of India. Similarly, the zamindars, too, were given many concessions and were assured that their property would be protected.

The pundits and maulvis were assured that the British government would not interfere in matters relating to Indian religions and would let the old traditions continue. There was also a promise that Indians would be included in the government. The truth is that the English had seen their Indian empire being snatched away in 1857. Now, they directed their efforts towards giving all kinds of concessions to the elite powerful Indians, to conciliate them and ensure that they continued to support the English.

Hyderabad State and the British

As with other kingdoms of the time, Hyderabad too came under the influence of the English East India Company. Eventually, the British placed their Resident in Hyderabad who oversaw the entire administration of the state. The Nizam had to appoint his Prime Minister or Dewan on Fig 15.12 Bahadur Shah Zafar and his sons being arrested by Captain Hodson. After Aurangzeb, there was no powerful Mughal ruler, but Mughal emperors continued to be symbolically important. When rebellion against British rule broke out in 1857, Bahadur Shah Zafar, the Mughal emperor at the time, was seen as the natural leader. Once the revolt was suppressed by the company, he was forced to leave the kingdom, and his sons were shot down in cold blood.

the advice of the Resident and with the approval of the British Governor General. All the departments had to be headed by ICS (Indian Civil Services) officers selected by the British. In this way, the British were able to gain complete control over the Nizam's state. They gradually pushed the state to adopt the administrative system and policies followed by the British in other areas too.

If you go to Hyderabad, you will see the famous Salarjung Museum which houses the various articles collected by Salar Jang who was one such Diwan of Hyderabad. He introduced many reforms and contributed to the economic development of the Hyderabad state. He divided the kingdoms into Subhas and districts after removing the old Deshmukhs etc. He abolished the revenue farming system and instead organised direct collection of revenue from the farmers by district officials. The Judicial reforms included the creation of Supreme Court, High court and District courts. Separate Civil and Criminal courts were also established. To facilitate transport, Salarjung improved the railways and roads. Important railway lines connected Hyderabad to Wadi, Madras to Sholapur and Madras to Bombay. English Medium schools, like Dar-ul-Ulm at Chadarghat in 1855, City College, Deccan Engineering College in 1870 and Madarsa-i-Aliya were also established. These reforms helped Hyderabad to emerge as a modern state in line with the rest of the country.
